Although there have been great strides since the 1990’s, there remains a disconnect between science and natural resource management. The list of sound reasons is innumerable. Yet, if we are to address rapid environmental change, improvement is imperative. As individuals, programs, and organizations, we have the capacity to create and implement strategies to yield actionable science and inform the stewardship of natural resources. From the vantage points of scientist, manager, and administrator, I will share strategies to build partnerships, develop common goals, implement a shared plan, and promote long-term success.

Everyone is Welcome!
